I report on attendance and participation in school events.

It is a known fact that many students do not participate in school events for various reasons. However, we can clearly see a trend in students' involvement in school activities. For example, students are more compelled to participate if the activity in question is enjoyable for them - over 88 percent of students cite "enjoyable experience" as a major reason to attend. Some other important reasons are meeting up with friends and family as well as personal involvement in school activities - the percentage of students who consider these reasons major fluctuates at about 50%. Getting educational experience is almost as important as meeting up with friends, as it only differs by 2%. The popularity of the event is considered the least important reason to attend it - 39% only consider it a minor reason, and 35% do not consider it a reason at all, which is ~~lower~~ the highest percentage among all other reasons.

There are several ways to increase attendance - one of them is to make the events more interesting or focus on the educational aspects. Another change that would affect the attendance levels is to involve as many people as possible in the event.

In conclusion, the best way to increase the attendance of school events is to make sure that people are personally involved and have a reason to participate - a perfect school event should be both enjoyable and educational.
