Report: why won't they participate?

School life doesn't always have to be about classes - events, school plays and festivals are also a valuable part of it. Various reasons have been known to affect the percentage of visitors and participants, so the presented diagram is helpful for encouraging people to dedicate their time to the events.

As the diagram shows, a student's expectation to "have a good time" is crucial for their will to participate. Another remarkable trend: the mere fact of being involved in something affects positively a large percent of students, so they tend to participate in order to boost their self-esteem.

It seems important to me to assure students that they can gain experience from participation: the joy of meeting their squad or even making new friends, the opportunities the educational event gives them, the thrill of socialising, of creating, of competing, of changing and growing as a person.

As for the advertisement I would recommend posting about the event in social media, but good old posters can be effective too. It's essential to be creative and to put some effort into making them: bright glittery posters may seem obscene, but people do pay attention to them.

Finally I would like to underline the importance of registering the changes quickly: the interests fluctuate, and all the recommendations have to be applied with caution in order to not overdo it.
