Museums and galleries are rated as some of the most popular means of entertainment, since they get millions of visits yearly. In this report, I will be presenting the results of my study on museum and gallery attendance.

First of all, I should point out that museums with admission charges got far less visits after the charge introduction. Their visit figures, however, did rise slightly in 2017 but they still never got as high as the original ones. Also, I would like to say that museums with a wide range of exhibitions, like the British Museum, got more visits over the years than museums with a narrower range respectively.

If we were to compare gallery and museum attendance, we could see that galleries on average got less visits than museums. It is also interesting that in 2013 the British Museum had much less ~~visitors~~ visitors than the National Gallery and the other two museums. The number of substantial British museum visitors did go up later, becoming bigger than of other museums mentioned.

Based on this, I would like to give a few recommendations to museum and gallery directors. Firstly, museums without fees or with fees introduced long ago have more visits than ~~the~~ the ones with charges introduced recently, so it is better to be careful about this subject. Secondly, museums with a wider exhibition spectre seem to ~~be more appealing~~ appeal more to people, ^{and} one should take advantage of this.

In conclusion, museums and galleries both ~~are~~ should be ^{directed} carefully to keep visit numbers up. That is not easy, but I believe that my report will help in this.
