Play to learn

The benefits of living in the era of technology.

Our school was honoured to participate in a free trial of the ABC's brand new computer game. We are grateful for such an opportunity. ^{style} As almost 2 months have passed ^{style} it is now possible to analyze the results of the experiment. ^{style}

We suppose that October was a perfect choice for that event. Due to the fact that the students had just come back to school life by that time, they showed not current but ^{style} a real level of knowledge. ^{style}

Participants were given tasks according to the form, 10 or 11 (Grammar or Vocabulary respectively). Probably, the most dramatical ^{style} difference was that the 10th form was actually "learning" as the material they were given was supposed to be new. On the other hand, the 11th form had some kind of practice. ^{style}

On the whole, the experiment may be considered successful. All the students seem to make far less mistakes than they used to. ^{style}

To our mind, it is incredibly important to know what students think of the game. ^{style}

The overwhelming majority of the 11th form claimed that the game lacked entertainment. The only thing they had to do was to make a multiple choice, while their opponents from 10th ^{style}

Form said that the game was too complicated as they needed to answer "open" questions only. Despite the fact that they found it difficult, they enjoyed the process.

Considering students' opinions and our own ideas, we concluded that though the ABC's game is quite useful it should be improved.

Perhaps, the 1st thing to do is to combine the types of questions and to find the balance between the amount of "new" and "old" material included.

We hope our report will somehow help the ABC developers.
