Computer Based Games as a Part of Education.

Aim of the Experiment.

As the modern world is changing, new ways of education has to be involved. Nowadays, many teenagers spend their free time in front of different electronic devices, and so we decided to integrate computer games into the process of education. Our aim was to figure out whether this idea can become alive or not.

Description of the Experiment

First of all, we decided that this experiment will take place in Form 10 and Form 11. 40 students from Form 10 participated in this experiment under the supervision of their teacher, as 30 students from Form 11 were able to work individually. Areas of studies differed between those two groups:

- Form 10 took Grammar module, including new material, like Sequence of Tenses, Indirect Questions, Modal Verbs and Articles. voc.
- Form 11 took Vocabulary module, which they have already learned. It included Idioms, Phrasal Verbs and Synonyms/Antonyms. voc.

Types of exercises differed as well. Form 10 had to fill the gaps and Form 11 had multiple choice.

Results of the Experiment.

Firstly, we should mention students' evaluation of computer games tasks. Form 10, who were introduced to the new material in the class were excited and responded very warmly about this experiment. Form 11, who had already learned material in their games, and were playing individually, didn't enjoy the experiment and stated that it was boring. As we can see, computer based games is a great way to introduce students to a new information. Also we can't deny the fact that this exercises led to fewer test mistakes in both groups of students. I would recommend using these games in process of learning a new material and in my opinion, we should repeat the same experiment with Form II under teacher's control, then we would see the full picture. But for now I see these exercises suitable only in process of learning new material ~~in the class~~ in class with the teacher. Student's ~~not~~ satisfaction is above everything here.
