Nowadays, the amount of school museums is rapidly growing. Almost every school has a museum which can tell the history of a school.

Our school museum tells us about our school during war times, the first teachers and principals. The museum records the history of our school from its establishment up to our days. There are lots of historical documents, records about the first alumni and ~~teach~~ stories about teachers who revolutionised the approach to education. Our school museum is not used effectively because it's rarely promoted and talked about among students and teachers. Also, it's not a very attractive place for students. I think there are two ways to increase the engagement of students in regards to our school. First of all, teachers should give more projects and home assignments connected with the museum, so students will have a reason to visit the museum and this would enhance their creative output during the completion of their projects and assignments. Moreover, we should make the museum an entertaining and attractive place, where students could gather together. In this case our only limitation is our imagination.

In conclusion, I can say that if we change the way how we perceive school museum we will make our students grateful for such an interesting place in school.
